SHOOTING THREAT

1 University of Missouri police arrested a 19-year-old white man on Wednesday on suspicion of making threats on social media to shoot black people. The arrest came two days after the school's president and chancellor stepped down following protests over their handling of reports of racial abuse on campus. REUTERS

PERSON KILLED BY TRAIN

2 An Amtrak train struck and killed a person who had crossed onto commuter rail tracks in Connecticut on Wednesday, New York's main transit agency reported. Amtrak Train 190, headed to Boston from Washington, D.C., struck the person at around 8:27 a.m. at the Metro North commuter rail station in Stratford, Connecticut, said Aaron Donovan, spokesman for New York's Metropolitan Transportation Authority. The victim, who was not authorized to be on the tracks, was not immediately identified. REUTERS

CHINA WARNS WTO

5 China has served notice to World Trade Organization (WTO) members, including the European Union and United States, that complaints about its cheap exports will need to meet a higher standard starting in December 2016, a Beijing envoy said. Ever since it joined the WTO in 2001, China has frequently attracted complaints that its exports are being "dumped," or sold at unfairly cheap prices, on foreign markets. Under world trade rules, importing countries can slap punitive tariffs on goods suspected of being dumped. REUTERS

BRAZIL MAY FINE BHP

The way Sharae Sanchez sees it, a bright future for her son won't just happen. It takes work, she said, and lots of planning ahead.

A mom at the Gallivan Boulevard housing development working two jobs, she's enrolled her son Lamarri in after-school programs and youth sports leagues. Wary of violence, crime and bad influences, she keeps a tight watch on him when he plays outside. Lamarri's been on the wait list for METCO, a program that buses inner-city kids to suburban schools, since his first birthday.

And even though he's only 7, she said she's always talking with Lamarri about college.

"I really want him to be something," she said. "And I know he's going to, but I just feel like it all starts at home. I wasn't lucky enough to have that, and I just really want him to understand this is a choice you have to make and you have to start now."

So Sanchez joined more than a dozen parents at the Gallivan Boulevard housing development when she signed Lamarri up for a new college mentorship program run by Big Brothers Big Sisters this year, designed to put Gallivan kids face-to-face with privilege and possibility far from home.

Twice a week, Lamarri and 17 peers, ages 7-12, to Wellesley and then on to college

"It helps introduce them to the world of college. The first step is just opening up the possibility that this is something they could do, that it's achievable."

Richard Greif

will shuttle back and forth to Babson College, the elite private business school in Wellesley. They'll meet with mentors from Babson and Olin colleges, complete learning activities, play games. And in the process of walking the school's pristine grounds and hanging out with students bound for high-powered careers, organizers and moms and dads hope they'll dream of diplomas.

"It helps introduce them to the world of college," said Richard Greif, a 1990 Babson alum and a Big Brothers Big Sisters vice president who, after college, mentored a "Little Brother" not unlike Lamarri for nine years. "The first step is just opening up the possibility that this is something they could do, that it's achievable."

Greif said he worked with Babson to build the collaboration to spur contact between his alma mater and young people in a place where it's hard to get on public transit and the wait list for mentors is long.

Many of the youth taking part — part of the 2,100 Little Brothers Little Sisters on the Massachusetts Bay region's roster — would be first in their family to go to college. Time spent with someone who's already there, he said, can help.

Lamarri's mentor is John Teschek, a 19-year-old Babson sophomore and fraternity brother who grew up working for a successful family business in athletics.

Lamarri likes basketball, so for their first meetup he and Teschek played basketball. Last week, Teschek took Lamarri to Sky Zone, the trampoline emporium. Then they went to Papa Gino's.

Being a Big Brother is that simple, Teschek said — it's not giving speeches about the value of education or being a perfect role model.

"Consistently hang out with these kids," he said. "If you can manage that, the rest will sort of come with it."

It costs about $46,000 a year to go to Babson. Teschek and Lamarri live different lives.

But ever since the two of them took turns shooting 3-pointers on a mini basketball hoop in Lamarri's room, Teschek said, they just seemed to connect.

"Lamarri and I get along pretty well," he said. "I'm excited to see where it goes."

The Gallivan-Babson cooperation is the latest from the region's Big Brothers Big Sisters outpost — a similar program connects Boston College and the Franklin Field development in Dorchester, and a partnership with Endicott College is scheduled to launch this winter, according to Greif.

Tapping Boston-area colleges for mentors can be a "win-win situation," said Cynthia Lewis, lead organizer for the nonprofit Mattapan United, who said she's currently working with Northeastern University grad students to start a youth advocacy program.

"Anytime we can bring positive energy to our community," she said, "I think it's a wonderful thing."

Fake gun in road rage row

A Charlestown man was busted with a very realistic looking replica gun, which police say he pointed at a driver in a road rage incident.

On Tuesday night at about 4:30 p.m., a driver called 911 and told Medford police the driver of a Honda Accord pulled out what looked like a handgun in the middle of a road rage incident on the northbound Route 93 on the Mystic Avenue ramp in Somerville.

Police found the Honda and charged Gary Pimentel, 20, of Charlestown, with disorderly conduct and assault with a dangerous weapon after officers found a replica gun with the orange tip painted black.

Replica guns STATE POLICE

Pimentel will be arraigned Wednesday in Somerville District Court.

Replica guns were banned in public places in Boston after Mayor Marty Walsh signed new legislation Monday.

"Replica guns have become a big issue for us," Police Commissioner William Evans said in a statement Monday. "We all too often encounter young people who are carrying these fake guns and even though they are fake, the public and police don't know they are." NATE HOMAN

BRIEF

Hyde Park man to be charged in connection to daytime shooting

A Boston Police SWAT team paid an early morning visit to a home on Gordan Avenue in Hyde Park on Wednesday morning, looking for a gun thought to be connected to a shooting two weeks prior.

Police obtained a search warrant and kicked down Malachi Scott's door at about 4:45 a.m. hoping to find a gun used in a broad daylight shooting on Tremont Street at about 3 p.m. on Oct. 28.

One person suffered a non-life threatening gunshot wound.

Police found a loaded .22 Ruger, which they believe was the weapon used in that shooting.

Scott, 19, of 58 Gordan Ave. will appear in Roxbury District Court on charges of assault with intent to murder, assault and battery by means of a dangerous weapon and unlawful possession of a firearm. METRO

Gwyneth Paltrow just won't shut up about 'conscious uncoupling'

Man, Gwyneth Paltrow is just priming herself for a career as a celebrity breakup coach. In fact, she's pretty sure that if anyone deserves the whole "broke the Internet" title, it's her and ex-husband Chris Martin. "When I was announcing my husband and I were separating and we were trying to follow this specific way of doing it — and the philosophy is conscious uncoupling — and we, like, broke the f—king internet," Paltrow said during a Goop-sponsored Q&A hosted by Fast Company this week. "It's such a hard time personally and then you have this added layer of all this criticism. Then when you look back you go, 'Well, this is actually kind of a good thing to talk back, introducing in some way.' Like, what if you could break up in a way where you remain a family even though you're not a couple?" Good job, but just don't pull anything patting yourself on the back there.

Gwen Stefani confirms her new album is a breakup album because duh

Well, this is certainly a big change from a week ago, when Gwen Stefani was all cagey about whether or not her new single, "Used to Love You," is about Gavin Rossdale — the man she's currently divorcing. In her latest radio interview, with San Diego's 93.3, Stefani lets loose that her entire new album, due out next year, is a breakup album. Which is great because as "Tragic Kingdom" proved some (gulp) 20 years ago, that's what she does best. "I would consider it a breakup record," she says. "My cross to bear was to go through these heartbreaks and write songs and help people. My truth is 'Used to Love You.' That's the song. That's what I said, and I feel really fine about sharing that, and I feel honored to share it." See? She's a giver.

Johnny Depp almost got fired off 'Pirates'

Remember back before 2003's "Pirates of the Caribbean" came out and Johnny Depp was just a well-respected actor known for challenging indie roles? Well, apparently the role that made him a massive, is-land-owning Hollywood mega-star was almost too different — at least for the Disney brass in charge of "Pirates of the Caribbean," as Depp's work gave them some major pause. "They wanted to fire me. I fully expected to be fired, and I got a call from the upper echelon at Disney who were courageous enough to ask me, 'What the f— are you doing?'" Depp tells Moviefone. "The questions came up, 'Is [the performance] drunk? Is it gay?' All I could say was, because they set me up with a great line, I said, 'Well, don't you know all my characters are gay?' I really expected to be fired, but I wasn't for some reason. They were actually going to put subtitles under my character. They couldn't understand Captain Jack." Listen, while it's great that they didn't dump him from that first "Pirates" film, considering the idea for the sequels probably wouldn't have been so bad.

Aaron Eckhart wants to be nice

The actor says he made "My All American" in part so his mom could watch it.

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

In "My All American," out Friday, Aaron Eckhart plays legendary University of Texas Austin head football coach Darrell Royal. VAN REDIN, CLARIUS ENTERTAINMENT

Aaron Eckhart remembers watching his "Any Given Sunday" co-star Al Pacino film his big locker room speech in Oliver Stone's football saga. He had to watch it many times over many takes. "He just got better and better," he recalls.

More than 15 years later, and Eckhart is playing his own head coach in "My All American," where he portrays University of Texas at Austin legend Darrell Royal. But the film, Eckhart points out, is not about Royal. It's about Freddie Steinmark (Finn Wittrock), a star athlete who, halfway through his college football stint, contracted bone cancer and died.

Playing a coach must be a challenge. Doubly so if you're playing a legend.

I got to Austin. I was eating in a nice steakhouse. I put the first bit of steak in my mouth and I looked up, and there's an oil painting of Coach Royal right over my head. I was like, "Are you kidding me? An oil painting? Maybe a picture of him, but an oil painting? This guy means something." I was talking to everyone I could, and I kept getting that look of like, "Dude, you ain't half the man he is. You don't have a prayer." [Laughs]

Texas is tough, as is Texas football.

Texas football is tough. The South is tough. I did a movie in Baton Rouge, and I basically lived on LSU campus. You'd go to a coffee shop and there were soccer moms debating over whether they should replace the quarterback or not. These people are invested in it. So I was a little bit nervous. You've got the accent, you've got the mannerisms and you've got the former players either approving or disapproving of your interpretation.

Luckily the movie's not entirely about Darrell Royal.

The movie's about Freddie Steinmark. It's about what happened in the '60s and the advances in medical care then versus what they have today — how a kid could get bone cancer and play through it. These guys were playing through pain; that was the edict. You were on the field unless your leg was broken. It's different today, with the concussion protocol. There's more attention paid to that. In those days there weren't any. How many times do you hear about players who lie to their coaches, lie to the medical staff, because they want to stay in the game? A doctor can only do so much. Today they demand that you get off the field. In those days if the guy said, "I'm good, coach," they were like, "OK." It was part of proving yourself as a man. It was macho. What could be more macho than football? But Freddie had a real problem.

GETTY IMAGES

Being evil

You've talked in the past about being afraid of being typecast as villains. But you've been playing good guys, sometimes very good guys, for awhile now.

I think the "villains" I've played have been pretty strong. And they're politically incorrect villains: "In the Company of Men" and "Thank You for Smoking," even "The Dark Night," though I don't consider him to be a villain. Those are the most visible films I've done. But the reason I wanted to do this movie is because it's a family movie. How many movies do we go to where you're sitting with your mom and you say, "Oh my God, I can't believe I'm watching this movie with my mom." It's embarrassing. I feel as I get older I want to be involved in good storytelling and family movies, where the whole family can go see it. You live with these people. [Laughs] They want to go to your premieres, man. I went to school at Brigham Young, so they can't show any of my movies. This one they could probably show.

Moving up the 'Blacklist'

Brooklyn's Mozhan Marnò loves the spotlight, unless she's at the laundromat.

NED EHRBAR
@Nedrick
ned.ehrbar@metro.us

Brooklyn-based actress Mozhan Marnò has been enjoying her second season as Samar Navabi, a Mossad agent from Iran going toe-to-toe with James Spader on "The Blacklist." And this week audiences learn a lot more about her story. We learned something, too: Don't bug her while she's doing laundry.

Marnò RYAN PFLUGER

We learn a lot about your character tonight.
You will definitely find out more about Samar's past. Maybe some insight into how she became part of the Mossad, and also you'll meet some people from her past.

What has the vibe like on set?
You know, we do pretty well. (Laughs) It's funny because depending on the story line and the episode, you end up spending more time with certain people. This year I have spent an inordinate amount of time with a certain redhead, and you know we have a good time. But the story line dictates who you end up spending time with. And this past episode it was just me and James.

Marnò stars as Mossad agent Samar Navabi on "The Blacklist," airing Thursdays at 9 p.m. on NBC. DAVID GIESBRECHT/NBC

That's not a bad way to work.
Not at all. (Laughs.) He's extremely fun and he was in rare form. He's very funny.

Everyone says the more dramatic the show is, the goofier everyone is when the cameras aren't rolling.
Oh, for sure. I mean, there's a lot of dudes (laughs). They run the gamut from macho to goofy to neurotic. There's every color of guy in this ensemble of dudes, and they're pretty lovely. I like being the woman. There's me and Megan [Boone], basically. I think we're the only female series regulars, actually. But whatever, I love attention, so what can I say?

Bonus question

Do you get recognized more for this or for "House of Cards"?
Now that I'm in the second season of "Blacklist," it's like an even split. Last year when I had just been introduced and I was still sort of a new character on "The Blacklist," it was more "House of Cards," for sure. It also depends where I am in the country. If it's in New York and L.A., it's a lot of "House of Cards." But recently it's been both. It's great to have your work out there and appreciated, and then sometimes it's like, I'm going to the laundromat and it's annoying. (Laughs) You look at them and they're looking at you and they're like, "What are you doing here? You're on TV, why are you at the laundromat?" We're all in the same boat here, buddy. It's Brooklyn.

Rachael Yamagata channels the bright side

See what happens when the queen of heartbreak moves on.

EMILY LAURENCE
@EmLaurence
emily.laurence@metro.us

Rachael Yamagata's 2004 album "Happenstance" was the 38-year-old's big break, with songs from the album landing on shows like "The O.C." and "Grey's Anatomy," known for turning under-the-radar tunes into hits. But for better or for worse, the album — full of breakup tracks — earned her a rep as an expert on heartbreak. Now, Yamagata is mixing things up with a new album in the works featuring songs with a different tune.

"[Heartbreak] has been my calling card for a number of years, for sure," says the singer. "The songs on the new album are more based around someone's personal journey of finding their passion, following their dream and keeping their spirits up."

Questioning her career

Even as a seasoned musician, Yamagata finds herself debating again and again if she should stick with her career choice. "Some days I wake up with a slew of ideas and incredible energy for everything. Other days I question, 'Should I stop? Should I find something new to do?' It's a constant revolving door of complete confidence and then total insecurity."

More than perhaps any of her other albums, the new album — out next year — is about soul searching. "The inspiration I had when writing the record was of a tightrope walker that really has to be in balance and experiencing these great highs and lows, the entire time taking a risk going through it," she says.

Celebrating the past

Yamagata is touring the country testing her new songs on audiences, but she's also revisiting some of the old favorites that launched her career. In fact, she just wrapped up a special tour celebrating the 10-year anniversary of "Happenstance," and she recorded an all-acoustic album of the songs.

"I didn't go back emotionally and feel how heartbroken I was," she says. "It was a fun nostalgia."

Positive vibes

She says, in the past, it has been much easier to write about heartbreak than happier times because it's a channel for articulating painful emotions, helping diagnose exactly what the problem is, making it easier to move on from it. But now, she relishes writing about the sunnier side of life.

"The positivity of the new songs came very natural to me," she says. "And if it didn't, it would have been another heartbreak album."

Old-school garage rock is always in style as long as characters like King Khan exist, whether it's with his own band, the Shrines, or the King Khan and BBQ Show, his collaboration with Mark Sultan. The duo just dropped "Bad News Boys" this year, and it is a raucous but melodic squall not evolved an iota — as it should be.

This British band is a rumbling psychedelic meltdown of an experience — one that, given their reliance on improvisation, is always different and explores unknown territory with the audience for the first time. THEATER

Lab Rats

Through Sunday
Atlantic Wharf
290 Congress St., Boston
Donation
Brownbox.tixato.com
Brown Box Theater presents this world premiere play by Patrick Gabridge about two friends, Mika and Jake, who make a weird living volunteering for medical experiments. Not the kind of thing you want to do forever. Perhaps their burgeoning relationship will be the way out — if it survives all the experiments, that is.

Fiddler on the Roof

Through Nov. 22
Footlight Club
7A Eliot St., Jamaica Plain
$25, 617-524-3200
www.footlight.org
Footlight Club presents the classic musical about Tevye, the rural Russian Jewish everyman. He witnesses his village's way of life beginning to crumble at the dawn of the 20th century, at the hands of forces both within and without. Even if he stands firm, he may have nothing left to stand on. Fortunately, he never completely loses his sense of humor.

ART

Mark Davis/Roger Bowman

Through Nov. 29
Pucker Gallery
240 Newbury St., Boston
Free, 617-267-9473
www.puckergallery.com
A sense of whimsy and mystery are common in these two artists' works. Bowman's still lives, with their soft, penciled colors, seem unthreatening enough, but upon closer looks some more unsettled narratives emerge. Davis' abstract mobiles bring the unnatural shapes imagined by Kandinsky and similar painters to life. Odd but graceful, asymmetrical yet balanced, they're like stand-ins for our own contradictory selves.

DANCE

Boston Bhangra Competition

Saturday, 6 p.m.
Orpheum Theater
1 Hamilton Pl., Boston
$20-$100
Collegiate Bhangra teams from across North America throw down at this annual showcase. Colorful costumes, elaborate routines and big beats combine for one of the most energetic dance experiences of the year. Bhangra has ancient roots in Punjab and contemporary influences from the Indian diaspora. The competition's organizers describe it, eclectically enough, as "cheerleading meeting hip-hop with a folk twist."

COMEDY

Central Wharf Comedy

Sunday, 7:30 p.m.
Central Wharf Co.
160 Milk St., Boston
This is only the second comedy show at Central Wharf Co., so if you're thinking "I didn't know they did comedy there," it's not just you. Hosted by Brian Higginbottom and Luke Touma, the second show features Shaun Bedgood, a local comic who frequently appears in "Quiet Desperation," a Boston-based Internet sitcom. Justin Hoff and more unnamed talents will also perform.

CIRCA

Friday through Sunday, Citi Shubert Theater
265 Tremont St., Boston, $40-$50
617-482-9393, www.citicenter.org
CIRCA, a world-renowned Australian dance troupe that mixes circus arts with dance, returns to Boston. The piece "Opus" features the stormy music of Shostakovich, and is performed by the Debussy String Quartet. The troupe's eye-popping athletic prowess would be enough by itself. Add the dramatic intensity of the music and choreography, and you've got a strong cup of tea.

This 1986 horror-comedy seems like the kind of film that should only be shown at midnight, and the Coolidge Corner Theater has obliged. It takes place at Tromaville High School, located right next to the local nuclear power plant. Of course there's an accident, and people start getting weirder — and more glow-in-the-dark. Christmas lights across Canada

ALL PHOTOS SHUTTERSTOCK

The launch of Canada's nationwide illumination event in Ottawa is truly spectacular.

The opening ceremony will be held on Parliament Hill, Dec. 2 at 7 p.m., with thousands of candle-carrying Canadians and visitors cheering as a giant "on" button on the stage is pressed to begin a stunning pyrotechnics display before a choir sings Christmas songs.

Now in its 31st year, Christmas Lights Across Canada was originally just an Ottawa event, created to light up city landmarks, mark the season and add a bit of a zing to winter in the capital. Then the provinces and territories joined in, with each capital city installing its own lighting displays and organizing switching-on ceremonies. One can't help but wonder how all this might look from space, as regular city lights suddenly become a hundred (or more) times brighter, dotting the landscape from the Atlantic to Pacific coasts and up into the Arctic in a display of national unity.

Take a spin on the Rideau Canal, which turns into a massive ice skating rink in the winter.

But the national capital is the focal point, where hundreds of thousands of lights dazzle the waiting crowds along Ottawa's Confederation Boulevard — not just one single highway but a series of streets forming the capital's ceremonial route, encircling the heart of the city before crossing the Ottawa River (and thereby the Quebec border) via Alexandra Bridge to the city of Gatineau.

Further enhancing the Parliament Hill event are the friendly volunteers who hand out candles, provide information, and — best of all — distribute free BeaverTails, deep-fried pastries with various toppings that are so delicious you will briefly care not a jot for your arteries. Get one early, with a free hot chocolate, before they're all gone.

Even if you can't make it to the opening ceremony, the lights stay in place until Jan. 7 and will be illuminated daily from dusk to the early hours. There's plenty to do in Ottawa in winter to occupy the daylight hours. Fun can be had on the frozen Rideau Canal, turned into a gigantic skating rink in winter with skates for rent and refreshment stands along the way. If that's too cold for you, head for the superb Canadian Museum of History in Gatineau, the National Gallery of Canada, or investigate the local food scene in ByWard Market and the rich choice of downtown restaurants.

Chautauqua: New York's undiscovered country

Found in an often overlooked region: Lucille Ball's hometown, a tribute to the Concord grape, the state's connection to the Nuremberg Trials and the inspiration for the environmental movement.

ALL PHOTOS ISTOCK

The westernmost region of the Empire State, Chautauqua County and Lake Erie, are worth the drive. At the top of the fun-stuff list is the Lucy Desi Museum and Center for Comedy (Lucy-desi.com) in Jamestown, Lucille Ball's hometown. It's like stepping into the world of "I Love Lucy," with sets, props and costumes from the show set up as though waiting for a performance to begin. Try your comic abilities by revisiting the "Vitameatavegamin" skit. The script and set are waiting.

Vineyards growing the Concord grape have lined the shores of Lake Erie for over 150 years. At the Grape Discovery Center (Grapediscoverycenter.com), interactive exhibits explore the history and science of grape growing. Sample the grapes as juice and wine, along with local cheeses and charcuterie.

The Nuremberg Trials after World War II exposed the full horror of the Third Reich and the complicity of its civil government. Supreme Court Justice Robert H. Jackson, a Jamestown native, was the chief prosecutor. The Robert H. Jackson Center (Roberthjackson.org) is dedicated to the appreciation of the rule of law worldwide. While the exhibits of photos of the trial and stories of the perpetrators of the Reich invite reflection, the most impressive and optimistic exhibit honors the high school teacher who inspired Jackson. It's a tribute to the power and impact of dedicated teachers.

Roger Tory Peterson is best known for his field guides to birds. The naturalist also inspired the nascent environmental movement. The Institute of Natural History (Rtpi.org) which bears his name displays his artwork and hosts exhibits of other wildlife artists. Inspired by what you see there? The nearby Audubon Nature Center (Jamestownaudubon.org) provides checklists of birds and wildlife seen on its 600-acre sanctuary. There's also a population of resident critters, including a rescued bald eagle.

Unusual for winter climates, two farmers' markets operate in the area. On Tuesdays, it's the Seneca Nation Market in Irving, featuring heritage meats, farm products, and crafts (Sni.org). On Black Friday and every Saturday, it's the Farm and Craft Market in Fredonia (Fredoniafarmersmarket.org). For more ideas, visit Tourchautaugua.com.

PLAYOFF TIME APPROACHES

FANTASY SPORTS

ADAM LEVITAN
alevitan@metro.us

The playoffs are coming, the playoffs are coming! As we get set for Week 10, we need to have one eye on Week 14 when the playoffs begin. One key way to ensure we get the best shot at a ring is to think about matchups down the line.

Stash on the Colts

With Andrew Luck (kidney) out at least a month, owners holding Colts are likely in true panic mode. They should be, as 40-year-old Matt Hasselbeck will bog down the offense. But stashing guys like Luck, T.Y. Hilton or Donte Moncrief could prove very beneficial come playoff time. Assuming Luck is healthy by Week 14, he'll get to face the Jaguars, Texans and Dolphins in the fantasy playoffs. It's not going to get much softer than that. If you can afford to hold some Colts on your bench, acquiring them cheaply is an upside move.

Miller Lites all around

The firing of run-game averse Joe Philbin and installation of hard-nosed Dan Campbell as interim coach has done wonders for Lamar Miller. He's suddenly a focal point of the offense and the primary red zone option. However, Miller has to face the rugged defenses of the Eagles and Jets in two of the next three weeks. After that, though, he gets the Giants, Chargers and Colts in Weeks 14-16. Waiting for a down game and then pouncing on Miller for the playoffs should lead to profit.

NFL matchups

DeSean Jackson vs. NO — It's time to erupt against arguably the league's worst pass defense.

Kamar Aiken vs. JAX — Aiken is the new No. 1 WR with Steve Smith done.

Brandon LaFell at NYG — Has come screaming off the injury list with at least seven targets in all three games.

Redskins receiver DeSean Jackson is a must-start this weekend. GETTY IMAGES

Julio down by the Panther yard

Julio Jones is arguably the best player in fantasy football and a big reason many first-place teams are where they are. Even thinking about trading him away – even for a King's Ransom – makes me queasy. But so does the idea of facing Josh Norman and the Panthers in Weeks 14 and 16. Quarterbacks have a passer rating of 30.5 when throwing at Norman this year, worst in the entire NFL (via PFF). He will be shadowing Julio when they face each other.

Celtics are 'best in bench'

C's second unit has emerged as one of the best — if not the very best — in the NBA.

JAMES TOSCANO
@Jimmy_Toscano
sports@metro.us

Isaiah Thomas is averaging 21.7 points and 5.8 assists per game this season. GETTY IMAGES

When Avery Bradley told members of the media last week that the Celtics' second unit had been beating the starting unit in practice, eyebrows raised. But the more we watch this Celtics team play, the easier it is to understand.

First things first: the starting lineup has been shuffled around a bit. Players who began the season on the bench are now getting time as starters, either due to injury or player ineffectiveness. But despite the starting lineup changes, the second unit still appears to be more effective than the starters out on the court.

In fact, they're saving them out there.

Because Brad Stevens has had to go to his bench earlier and more often than most coaches would like, the Celtics went into Wednesday night leading the NBA in bench minutes at 22.1.

But it's not just time that this bench is leading in. They're averaging a whopping 51 points per game, good for first in the NBA, as well as 23.5 rebounds per game, also good for first. Ball hogs? Nope. The bench dishes out 11.2 assists, ranking them third. And just as they're finding success on the offensive end, how do 4.7 steals (first in NBA) and 2.8 blocks (second in NBA) per game sound?

The bench production was never more apparent than in the 99-83 Celtics win over the Bucks on Tuesday night. A 29-9 run, largely from the second unit, closed out the first half of the game. A 16-0 run in the third quarter – again with the second unit – gave the Celtics a bigger lead.

All in all, the C's bench scored 60 points in Milwaukee – and that doesn't include Isaiah Thomas' 20 points.

Here are four important bench players going forward:

Kelly Olynyk
Olynyk could be the glue of this bench. He's got the skill to hurt opponents both beyond the arc and in the paint. After a cold start to the season, he appears more comfortable in a big role off the bench.

Isaiah Thomas
Sure, Thomas has started the last week or so, but he's expected to go back to the bench upon Smart's return. And when he does, an already stacked bench gets its best offensive player back. Thomas will be in the running for Sixth Man of the Year this season because he's going to lead the team in points.

Evan Turner
Turner may find himself in the starting lineup at times this season because he's so versatile. Stevens is a huge fan, as Turner can play both guard spots as well as small forward. Turner is also one of the only play-makers on the team.

R.J. Hunter
A rookie? A rookie. If Stevens elects to play some small ball, Hunter has already proven to be ahead of where many thought he'd be on the defensive end. And that shot? Yeah – they can use that, too.
